LOGLINE:

Drivers of six white cars all end up in a tragic accident and meet each other in the afterlife in a Grey Room, where they realize the sins that got them there, and, getting a second chance, resolve to be better people.

SUMMARY:

Have you ever become so angry with your computer that you wish you could shoot it? A computer shoots the user, yet no one believes it. A young man is reported missing, and near his computer is found his blood, so it looks like he was shot. Authorities cannot find the body. Evidence leads to him sitting at his computer all day, being frustrated, and calling the computer names. The family of the victim that he lives with are all persons of interest. Since they weren't guilty, they decided that they needed to investigate what had happened, to prove their innocence and find their loved one. The family has to overcome many strange obstacles throughout their investigation, but in the end, they can prove that the computer did indeed shoot the young man.
