LOGLINE:

When a glitch in his car's GPS lures him into a hidden, brainwashed metropolis, a rebellious drifter must lead an uprising to expose the city's walls before the "chips" in their heads become permanent.

SUMMARY:

Have you ever wondered what happens to the highway traffic that disappears as you drive out of a greater metropolitan area? This mind-bending narrative exposes a sinister conspiracy theory orchestrated by a corrupt auto dealer. The dealership secretly installs tracking microchips in vehicles belonging to individuals in highly specific, targeted occupations. Using these tracking chips, the dealer covertly redirects and lures unsuspecting drivers into a rapidly growing isolated small town.

This community harbors a terrifying secret: once you enter its borders, you can't escape. The entire municipality is permanently encased inside a massive, invisible glass bubble dome. Inside this artificial ecosystem, trapped citizens undergo severe psychological brainwashing. They are conditioned to believe that the outside world no longer exists and that they are residing in a perfect, harmonious dystopian utopia. Content with their fabricated reality, no one ever attempts to flee. The status quo is shattered when the tracking system lures in the wrong person—a rebellious outsider who sees through the illusion, stirs up chaos, and orchestrates a desperate jailbreak plan to escape the dome.
